<https://archive.is/Ph7oT#selection-1517.1-1533.225>

Something important's going on in NYC right now: An on-going protest against government corruption and greed. It's Occupy Wall Street, and similar peaceful protests have sprung up in other U.S. cities since 9/17. They're based on the Middle East protests. Here's an article to get you started. Sadly, these protests aren't being adequately covered by most of the major news outlets (and it's no surprise why), but they really need to. Its participants are just like you and me, and represent the disillusioned majority of America nowadays that struggle just to make ends meet, while the rich minority get richer.

Anyone else been following this story? I for one hope it succeeds and if a movement happens to spring up in the Twin Cities, I'll probably participate in some fashion. We need to send a message to Washington and Wall Street that the current economic situation is unacceptable. When college students and grad students are unable to find jobs (or if they do, it's something that anybody could get, regardless of education level), that's pretty sad.

And keep in mind, this isn't politically charged, at least not in the sense of Republicans vs. Democrats. It's about our economic system in general, which knows no party. So let's keep the discussion off that sort of thing.
