There's too much good ones imo, it's fine that you can make your own beatmaps for songs and import them. I think the ones that make it are mostly actually making their money off their music.

I'm subtle in public.

Every single time my friends come over every weekend though, I'm always playing Project Diva on the PS3 when things die down or when cooking is being done. They are always in awe when I play Extreme songs, and they are legitimately amused by the videos and the lyrics. Female friends think the modules are cute and try to interpret the meanings of the songs, to which they are 50/50. Male friends fucking love when I play Blackjack and Luka Luka Night Fever because of dat sexy Luka and all that jigging.

Mitchie M. I bought the "The Greatest Idol" album on a recommendation at the buyf/a/g thread and I fucking loved it.

I can't believe how real she sounds with the added breaks for taking breaths and how smooth the words sound. I actually tricked one of my friends into thinking that she was a new up and coming idol, and then when I explained who / what she is, his mind was blown as fuck and now I have yet another Miku friend.

A anon made a wall of text how it worked out, I will make it simple.

If you just want to make songs without making any money, you only need to pay for the program. When you want to make money from your songs you need to pay royalties. If you want a vocaloid on your album cover you also have to pay.

■ Anonymous 3 hours ago No.279205214

Bear with me when I say this, but Piano is the Nintendo of music.

Basically ubiquitous, often seen as a "beginner's instrument," but also what most inexperienced people think of when they think of music; incredibly versatile but simultaneously limited; absolutely braindead simple at its easiest, and mind-numbingly, soul-crushingly difficult at its hardest; and yet, it is not technically the most popular instrument(that being guitar, of course).

Nice. Added to my Rin playlist.

On a different note, I got my first perfect on a difficulty higher than [redacted] today. It was Meltdown on Hard. Felt pretty good.
