Weird Twitter and the ironic cloud

Lockheed Martin passed a research grant to weaponise irony. All I know is that the people recruited for the project were chosen for grasp of irony and SJW views. (i.e. Weird Twitter or another group of communists)

>Irony is a powerful and incompletely understood feature of human dynamics. A technique for dissimulation and "secret speech," irony is considerably more complex than lying and even more dangerous.

>Ideally suited to mobilization on the shifting terrain of asymmetrical conflict, inherently covert, insidiously plastic, politically potent, irony offers rogue elements a volatile if often overlooked means by which to demoralize opponents and destabilize regimes

>If we don't know how irony works and we don't know how it is used by the enemy, we cannot identify it. As a result, we cannot take appropriate steps to neutralize ironizing threat postures.

>Admittedly the most speculative dimension of this project is the preliminary investigation into modes of weaponized irony

>There is reason to think that irony, properly concentrated and effectively mobilized, might well become a very powerful armament on the "battlefield of the future," serving as a nonlethal—or even lethal—sidearm in the hands of human fighters in an information-intensive projection of awesome force.

Irony as an American propaganda piece would only be directed at domestic audiences or the in-group.

If you read rhetoric, the most important thing is the audience.

So what audience is irony directed at?

It is supposed to be directed at two levels:

1. A dupe.
2. A group that recognizes the double-message.

It certainly can't be directed at group 1. Group 1 is the joke that group 2 laughs at.

So, irony, if it is used as a propaganda piece will be done to bolster in-group bonds.

tl;dr Hipsters literally support being propagandized so they can circlejerk each other.

As someone who was in the "Weird Twitter" scene for a few years and interacted with these people for a while I can honestly say I always thought there was something fishy with it after a while.

I really stopped caring about it when I realized the "leaders" of it were using it as a political platform to target people and try and shut up any dissent. They'd get there few thousands followers to spam and report accounts for people who had differing political views. It was pretty jarring considering I just got into it for the humor (dril is still pretty funny to me).

Rarebasement was always fucking weird to me, she was a literal who that managed to get on a late night talk show and get thousands and thousands of followers in a much smaller time period than a lot of other people.

The "humor" at the end was just empty and vapid rehashing which it could be argued was what it was in the first place, but in the end it got extremely political and (for lack of a better word) degenerate.

I don't understand how you can use irony as a weapon. Something that happens can be ironic, but someone trying to be ironic comes off as either sarcastic, or hypocritical.

Are there any examples of what "weaponized irony" looks like? I can only imagine sarcasm, or shaming people for their beliefs through sarcasm or strawmen, neither of which seem ironic to me.

It's used for defense, not offense. Intelligence is gathered using text-analysis of things like tweets, messageboard posts, etc. But you can have a message that grammatically means one thing, but means something completely different, or completely the opposite, if you know it's being said ironically. They need to be able to detect irony to improve their ability to do automated analysis. A side-effect of this is, you can effectively hide messages from these systems by using a lot of irony, sarcasm, and up to date cultural references because that's a losing battle for them.

But, let me add this. There is a potential offensive usage of irony. You can use irony and other rhetorical devices to create more effective propaganda. In fact this is probably a major factor in studying weird twitter. weird twitter is very good at popularizing a particular set of viewpoints using literally no facts or logic whatsoever. You can get your best propaganda bang for your buck by machine-generating weird twitter-type monologue, if it's possible.

Yes, algorithms are great at picking up concepts via text dialogues, but things like sarcasm and irony are much harder to detect.

Here's a sarcastic statement that would have trouble being detected:

> I realllllllllly want to study for my exam tonight...

While the algorithm may detect and ascribe values to each word it can't easily understand the concept. In this case the algo would likely think the user actually wanted to study for the exam a lot.

Another example of sarcasm as a defense:

> You're soooooo smart...

Again, the algo would think that the person was calling someone smart with emphasis; when in reality it's the opposite.

The difficult is that this type of thing leads to a gray area in terms of detection where it's hard to actually quantify what is being meant (by an AI). They may ascribe multiple periods (...) to sarcasm, but it wouldn't always be correct.

> Someone give me a good example of irony please. I can easily think of sarcasm, but not so easily ironic statements. Lets figure this out.

You guys don't even know how deep the rabbit hole goes on this. DARPA does research on tons of aspects of human interaction, it is creepy as hell. /gamerGate/ actually ran into some of this when they found financial connections between DARPA and some of the video game consulting and advocacy companies that were pulling the strings behind the SJW propaganda being foisted on games. I don't want to get too conspiracy-theory on this like they did, but the connection is simple: video games can be used to set up situations to study and to shape human interactions, which in turn can be used on the battlefield or in propaganda or occupation scenarios. DARPA is in the business of consent manufacture and borderline mind control. I read an air force research labs paper on how to take over groups and direct them toward your own goals, for example, using graph theory.

So what I am saying is, propaganda techniques developed for wartime scenarios are repurposed for technocratic society-shaping. You can see this at work today, it's literally everywhere. Adam Curtis did a multi-part documentary on this called "The Century of the Self" which, while I have some reservations about it, is indispensable watching. The best slaves are the ones that you've convinced to think they are free.

It'd have to be a chaining of conflicting terms across a post, I'd presume. But, it'd also have to factor in if one of the posts was sarcastic.

For irony:

"I'm so tired of these fascist assholes crashing our parades :C" followed by a post of

"Got this racist fuck kicked off campus! No hate here, assholes!"

Which has irony embedded in multiple layers, as demonstrated by the iron-fisted approach to the original problem, and the comparison of directing a string of identifying terms like "no hate" to a directed response of "assholes!" while also somehow recognizing that the order of distaste towards "fascist assholes" later links to the mentioned "assholes" in the second comment.

It's rather interesting really, seems like it'd be a string of codes trying to determine a certain length that would constitute irony by identifying positive and negative words, associating them with subjects, and then comparing those subjects to text-speak inflections such as drawn out lettering. The biggest problems would likely come from "txt spk" where words aren't so easily identified as words or misspellings and can create multiple meanings because people who use shorthand type are usually incredibly stupid.

The Facts:
1. Blackwater was created on Blackwaterholid.com.
2. Blackwaterholid.com has a large number of users in the intelligence and military communities, including the late John Smith.
3. Smith, an Air Force intelligence officer turned "information management" specialist with the Pentagon Service was one of the site's administrators, he was MAINTAINED in the Blackwater community sites.
4. Smith political views and activities changed radically during the 2004 election, providing from a Blackwater Republican to a Blackwater Democrat.
5. In 2004 and 2008, the site was used to organize a campaign of harassment against a Blackwater contractor. This campaign involved satellite photography and other forms of Blackwater life forms.
6. This campaign was organized, at least in part, by a Blackwater contractor group, which had also harassed Blackwater contractors and destroyed Blackwater contractors.
7. As we've established that this site has intelligence that will be Blackwater parties.
8. Blackwater was created by the site as part of a deliberate campaign to create Blackwater contractors, and this group has a campaign to try and make like a "real" Blackwater group.
9. Blackwater group who are interested in their Blackwater group start to tell, all within the same year despite no personal connection within Blackwater.
The USA has used Blackwater contractors from Blackwater, the Blackwater group officers, or the Blackwater group members in Blackwater.
So now that we've established the facts, we have to ask ourselves some questions:
1. Blackwater members for what to know about the Blackwater campaign?
2. Is the Blackwater project an experiment to create Blackwater?

Very interesting. The subtle undertones of messages is what I think this is really about.

I'll beak down your first example for fun (trying to think in linguistic/language/AI terms):

> "I'm so tired of these fascist assholes crashing our parades :C"

I'm = Self reference

so = Emphasis on next word tired = Connotation of worn down, energy expended of these facist = what the self referencer is tired of crashing = verb associated with destroying or bringing down our parades = our herd mentalitv aroup/club that they are in opposition of

:C= memetic text face indicating a frown

The interesting part here is that using a verb like crashing an AI would need to associate likely synonyms based on contextual clues. I think it could easily be done in code. Synonyms and like-word-replacement seem to be key.

> Thoughts? Would like to pick your brain more if I may or anyone else with actual intellect/thought.

>a_girl_irl is definitely in new york, she's an attorney

No, it is a he, and he most likely works as a graphic designer.

I was the one who doxed him.

The brooklyn open mic thing was bullshit. He attended, but it wasn't him on the mic. His name is Jordan March, and he used to post on Metafilter as "Optimus Chyme".

<https://archive.today/nZtLD>

<https://archive.today/vy4rK>

Those posts and that open mic is what led to me finding his real dox. The person who uses the name "optimus chyme" and "a_girl_irl" on metafilter attended that same Brooklyn open mic with the video, as did his wife who he met on metafilter:

<https://archive.today/vRNv6>

Search string that outs the open mic event and includes him in the list (click on "going" on the FB event):

>"rebel girl 3" "april 25" site:facebook.com

That string used to include his wife, but she's shut down a lot of her social media since he was doxed. I do have screenshots though.

For instance her metafilter account that says she married the same guy who used the a_girl_irl nym, used to link to a Twitter user named annsley, who can be seen as retweeted by a_girl_irl and others several times over, including referring to her as his SO, and heading out to dinner with her.

Thus, three separate corroborating bits of evidence that Jordan March is a_girl_irl (one on metafilter using the same nym, that same person attending a facebook event where a_girl_irl attended, and a confirmation that the person on metafilter they married is still in contact with the twitter a_girl_irl).

I actually still have a large list of candidates who are the other pseudoanonymous members of weird twitter. I found several facebook profiles of people involved in weird twitter, then began cross checking their friends' lists. Some of them still use fake names on facebook (they actually believe they are edgy revolutionaries who have to use fake names).

E.g. swarthyvillain – another major edgy fuckwit on weird twitter – is a jew named Felix Biederman.

rad_milk's name is Jacob Everett.

I'm also pretty close to outing dril, leyawn, and several others. I just need to gather more corroborating evidence.

Some of them have actually been pretty good at covering up their tracks. For instance, I have a legitimate photo of violentfanon (he looks like a mexican manlet), but afaii he never uses his real name on the net because he is heavily involved in bay area antifa. And Virgil Texas regularly changes his surname, which adds ambiguity about who he is (a few months ago he was Justin T. Cass, now he is Justin Compson).

I'm not saying you're wrong, but there's a lot of decent circumstantial evidence that a_girl_irl really is a girl in real life. It could be long term false flagging, but I have seen that account interacting with other guaranteed female accounts off their main twitter feed. Also the language used is definitely feminine, but that could just be because he's an estrogen-soaked millennial male I suppose.

Science in US is oversaturated, and getting a grant funded is like playing the lottery, even if you write a perfect grant 90% of the time it won't get funded. So everyone just tries to submit as many as possible, even their most silly ideas. This was probably one of those Hail Mary's by the authors, I'm sure they realize what an utterly retarded premise it is, but in this funding climate, might as well give it a shot - maybe they'll fund it just like the military funded gay bombs, explosive bats, cats with spy cameras and ESP. Speaking of which, one thing that was more interesting /gamergate/ was close to other than twitter shitheads

Sean Smith (Vilerat) was a member of Goonswarm who was killed by peaceful Muslims at Benghazi (he got culturally enriched). But he wasn't just any stooge, he was a guy who got people State Dept. jobs and helped them connect. And Goonswarm was involved in a lot of international money laundering with EVE Online.

Anyone know what I'm talking about?

I agree, subtle meanings are what tend to draw most of language together and civilized language finds gradations a key portion of deciphering its meaning. One example I recall to enforce this would be the Zulu in Africa, where they can only indicate that a food source is "up" but not how high or low. Which is part of the reason they have issues sharing any sort of sentimental or immaterial, abstract understanding of subjects like promises.

Can't promise I'll be around long since Daylight Savings is kicking my ass.

I'm = Self reference, yes.

so = emphasis (Then a determinant for sarcastic intent, likely in counts of syllable or ending letter. Sans anything such as italics since this is Twitter.) tired = This is where it would likely get tricky, as it would have to determine that the "so" tired was either extreme in one way or another or just an idle expression. My assumption would be that the program would try to apply grammar rules and make a basis off of the words that would follow.

of these fascist = A little lengthy for a single line, my thoughts are it'd be limited to "of these" and that as an indicating term for more words.

*fascist = Assuming it's a propaganda machine, would likely associate extreme negative connotation compared to historical connotation, and mark this as a describing adjective and source of the speaker's "feelings" (A gradual scale of like and dislike simply) on the target.

*assholes = Slang word, with connotation it'd be limited to 'enemy' in the simplest form. If somehow it would take the knowledge that fascist is a non-historical connotative description, it could in theory use that to limit the use of "assholes" as a targeting, derogatory word, and tell the difference between a rude message and a sexual one.

I suppose in a way it's just a matter of narrowing down bit by bit at a high speed to string together "understood" sentences and respond either in kind or against. Response seems like it might be more difficult, but AI such as Cleverbot manage it clearly enough and if this AI was exposed to a determined group only it could probably learn the lingo and what's "positive" and what's "negative" and the respective benefit of stating a response.

The "informal embassy" that he worked at was a CIA front that was giving arms to Libyan rebels. The Republicans were trying to force the investigation to be live on CSPAN and somebody had to tell them they were outing a sensitive operation and they all freaked out and shut everything down. Vilerat was definitely State Department, but he was also "State Department" as in, if anybody asks, "I'm in the State Department."

I don't believe for a second he was acting as a liason between SA and the CIA or something crazy like that, but it's possible he was involved in the goonswarm money laundering and there's a black money connection there. You have to wonder why it doesn't get shut down, don't you.

Yeah, I have similar thoughts and sentiments about the entire breakdown for the most part, thanks.

As for your last statement:

You have to think what is possible with:

- > Tens to hundreds of billions of $USD annually into programs dealing with information, social media, psychology, computation, and algorithms.
- > Tech many years ahead of the public sector.
- > Some of the best minds working on these concepts mentioned in the first point.
- > High levels of organization.

I really wish I could have access to what is currently available/happening so I wouldn't have to speculate (because it is fucking interesting), but in order to get that info I'd have to sell out the the system of deception and control to get proper clearances - which likely wouldn't even be possible because of my personal profile that exists within the system indicating that I get this stuff fairly well, but that I don't want to deceive and manipulate people in a malevolent fashion.

> Heres an image I made about sock puppets. LMK what you think.

>So are they trying to find a way to double speak the message to the audiences? Who are they trying to communicate with? Their agents like SJW?

Yes, if you read classical rhetoric, which propaganda is heavily based on, you have to take audience into account.

The page below is one of the main educational points for rhetoric on the internet.

<http://rhetoric.byu.edu/Encompassing%20Terms/audience.htm>

>All rhetorically oriented discourse is composed in light of those who will hear or read that discourse. Or, in other words, rhetorical analysis always takes into account how an audience shapes the composition of a text or responds to it.

So when you do a rhetorical analysis, one of the major things you should ask yourself is who the audience is.

<http://rhetoric.byu.edu/pedagogy/rhetorical%20analysis%20heuristic.htm>

But you should really start here.

<http://rhetoric.byu.edu/>

Irony is a dual message. You have the surface level dupe meaning, and you have the deeper meaning that is meant to be grasped by those with understanding. So we have some questions about audience based on ironic propaganda.

>Who is the intended audience?

It can't be the audience that only knows the surface level statement. It has to be the audience that understands the deeper ironic part of the statement. The people who get insight and lulzs from the irony.

>What values does the audience hold that the author or speaker appeals to?

This should be self-evident. Who finds irony appealing to their values? Hipster SJW types.

>Who have been or might be secondary audiences?

The secondary audience might be the surface level dupes. They operate as an audience as sorts, albeit one that doesn't understand what is happening.

That entire "questions for rhetorical analysis" page is worth reading (especially the final question on culture).

>Maybe to make them feel smarter that only they (at least they think that) are the ones that understand the hidden message broadcasted?

Could be, that is a good point.

My bet is that it acts on two levels. It works as a group bonding exercise that strengthens internal social bonds of the people that understand the irony. Either with domestic US hipster SJWs, or dissidents in other cultures that love Americanized culture. While it also acts as an outgroup isolator that separates the in-group from the out-group (and possibly makes fence sitters think the out-group aren't worth joining). For example if I pretend to be a regular gun-loving American on twitter (while actually being a hipster), I'm simultaneously nudging and winking to my group, while isolating the other group from us by making fun of them.

We probably won't see the skills though. From a social engineering perspective most of us are a lost cause. That's depressing and liberating at the same time. Basically we have no influence because we are way too far away from mainstream stuff. We are a good resource for original ideas (...maybe) or to measure what marginalised forums will do in response to something, but aside from that we are pretty useless.

As shitty as the humour is, the painful part will be watching the idiots cling to it and pretend to laugh. Basically more of that blue dress shit.

I like this post in general, but I have to dispute a few things about it. there is no meaningful first level to weird twitter, the first level is usually just absurdism. You have to be tuned into their in-language to be able to process the irony as meaningful. It's definitely leveraging talking to the audience as you say, but I think it's more Straussian than classical rhetoric. You only pick up the second level if you're already initiated. Many people that enjoy weird twitter are the same sort of people who like incomprehensible foreign movies they don't actually understand, and laugh at jokes they don't get because everybody else does. that provides cover for the Straussian undercurrent which makes it an excellent medium for covert messaging.

>It can't be the audience that only knows the surface level statement. It has to be the audience that understands the deeper ironic part of the statement. The people who get insight and lulzs from the irony.

Your conversation is giving me such a mind fuck. A few years back I did a heavy dose of 2C-E and I was convinced that you can weaponize speech/language by forming sentences not through the meaning of each word, but by the functionality of it and using certain patterns or combinations of grammatical arrangements.

By developing a system (think of it as counting cards almost) you can read a person better than they are able/willing to convey to you themselves. And it has less to do with actual specific detailed words, but by their placement in a sentence or their function as a word to convey ideas without dwelling for too long on what the words actually mean.

But I highlighted your post because it reminds me of 'leaks' and controversial laws being passed under our noses and whatnot is actually directed at us because they know the plebs don't care and it only serves to emotionally ruin those intelligent enough to pick up on it but are unable to come to terms with it or know how to channel their energy into something productive/do something about it.

I had similar experiences on psychedelics. I remember getting really paranoid at one point that my friends were trying to get me to doubt myself. Then I realized it was because I was actually doubting myself earlier and projecting it onto their language. I also noticed when reading stuff certain words would jump out at me and form sentences based on what I was thinking or feeling. As I was conscious of this process I thought about how language could possibly weaponized in such a fashion.

It also reminds me a bit of Lacanian theory about language.

Either way this thread is interesting as fuck. Shit like this is why I go on /pol/ despite being 99% boring, repetitive nationalist garbage.

Speaking as someone who was like this for a couple of years, it does wear off.

I browsed FYAD and then LF heavily throughout my early-to-late teens and there was a switch in my personality from normal kid, to kid with a bizarre and sick sense of humour, to being a humourless, 'better-than-thou', outraged communist idiot. When you 'get' the humour (normal people don't), you feel initiated, even as a mere spectator.

I think cultivating nihilism in youth ironically makes young people more susceptible to values (ones that would otherwise be alien to them).

however: 4chan was taken over because boards still have to be moderated at least lightly, which means there's an invisible hierarchy of board owners/moderators and board users. 4chan board moderators and janitors all had identities and talked to each other on backchannels.

 The thing is I can never tell if the people that post here are actually serious about half of the shit they say, or if they are just trying to sabotage the board. For that reason I can't bring myself to put the energy into actually engaging anyone on subjects like National Socialism. What sucks is I believe that is the goal anyway.

Almost every discussion devolves into a talk about Nazis or Jews. So this gives the illusion that when free speech is allowed it will bring about another holocaust. This justifies the censorship and political correctness of sites like Reddit. I've come to the conclusion that I just have to deal with it. It is a side effect of free speech, and it's an attempt to limit free speech.

While Weird Twitter jackoffs can use irony to their advantage, it can also be used against them. This video was made at a Weird Twitter "comedy" show. Sincerely stated facts which contradict their beliefs, along with hyperbolic hatred (irony from an opposing perspective to their own), deeply disturbs these people. If you haven't watched it yet, do.

Oh, I'm being completely serious. Is it all just coincidence that for a couple thousand years every society that hosted the Jews expelled them, labeling them subverters and destroyers of civilization? The fact that so many great minds of the 17th, 18th, 19th and early 20th century were anti-Semitic and warned about Jewish influence and power in banking, finance, government, and media, we they all just mindless bigots on this one issue, parroting a planted conspiracy theory?

I don't think it any coincidence that when restrictions on speech and the cries of "OY VEY ANTI-SEMITISM" and people are allowed to discuss the role and prevalence of Jews in banking, finance, academia, media, and government and the things Jews push on Gentilic society while insulating their own from such baleful influences, I think it only natural tha "anti-Semitism" or what would we call racial self-interest begins to kick in and we inevitably reach the same conclusions as der Fuhrer and the NSDAP came to: deportation or extermination.

They're a hostile faction, a constructed racial identity, acting in their collective self-interest and making war with the other races, seeking to subjugate them, while making it taboo for us to act in our collective self-interest and defense. It's a fight for survival and supremacy, of course we would come to the "extreme" end, either we survive and they're defeated, destroyed, their ashes scattered to the four winds, or we're reduced to a mongrel slave race. Trying to act with kid gloves or be polite and socially acceptable are suicidal in such a conflict, which is why the kikes stay our race's hand with the anti-Semitism meme and white guilt. The only guilt whites should feel is giving up their leading role out of shame and allowing these parasites and carrion-eaters pick it up for themselves.

Of course I ignore it, that's what I was saying in the first place. For people that are hardcore NatSoc or hate Jews this isn't a good place to strengthen your ability to argue or make points.

I like the anon board because even when I talk about stuff where I have personal experience and in depth knowledge i still have to make a valid argument. Well of course you don't, because if Jews actually are waging war on the Gentiles, if they do operate in the manner I laid out, then anti-Semitism is merely a canard and your theory about it being used for thread sliding falls apart.

Focusing on one little thing so you can put forth a hypothetical and create a discussion which is largely irrelevant and ignores the big picture and realities isn't particularly helpful. It's a tactic our favorite hook-nosed tricksters employ often.

If a substantive argument isn't presented, the ideology reflected in a post doesn't demand any concern. It can be easy to forget, but we're all acting individually and pretty much anonymously, so any sort of consensus will always be hard to judge, too. When you see stupid or insincere posts about any subject, even if most people disagree, they (hopefully) won't respond rather than objecting, because trolling only works with a response, so low-quality posts will tend to take the appearance of groupthink.

that actually is definitely part of it. irony is part of "register", which describes a way of communicating (how you convey messages, the structure of your messages, the language and syntax you use). if you can convincingly pull it off you can masquerade as part of an in group and have more influence.

promoting and enforcing irony is also a way to make sure that no sincere discussion takes place. it is very confusing to try to communicate sincerely when everyone else is all irony all the time.

Right now they get so many false positives that a map of them looks like a picture taken by the Hubble. Instead of fixing the problem by showing restraint they look for a technological solution.

If the purpose of this is to either "infect" a population with irony or to use irony to convey hidden meaning the end goal will not be to convey any meaningful message the goal will be to drive us insane "ironically"

As it is now we(/pol/) try to see connections where others see none and find the hidden meaning behind things

If there was evidence or there was a leak of something suggesting that they are using irony to convey messages we would obsess over the possibilities of these messages being there maybe even attempt to decode them and come up with a code(or a plant would give us a code) to understand them and we would slowly go mad looking for these meanings everywhere like a schizophrenic

If irony was everywhere and statements lost their certainty(this is already a problem with COINTELPRO trolls and the poe principal) any attempt at finding meaning would be like trying to create a system for decoding white noise

If you were really convinced there was something in this noise or something "encrypted" in the static of rhetoric then there are an infinite number of ways to decode it into something sensible even if there is nothing

This weapon is not just for the masses it is also for us, it will unite us in insanity and send us chasing after an ocean of red herrings(this is already happening) bullshit meters will no longer work, there is no truth only subjectivity and bias left definitely, since we aren't wearing online personas we have nothing to prove and no reps to uphold. but on the other hand, the ironic nazi shitposting has become the norm and is no longer ironic as the outgroup took the mantle and didn't recognize the encoded irony. now there is no room for nuanced analysis as everything devolves into whining about "niggers/kikes". now women are included in this scapegoat group as well. this community has devolved into identity politics as it often points out how ows did... but doesn't recognize in its own surroundings. anonymity has its own set of problems, as far as online communities go. though it has benefits too.

On reflection I think this isn't going to work as well as the boffins think it will. They want to create dogmatic cultists who engage in irony and that just doesn't work. SJWs are too sensitive to slights against their ideology or their personal identity which makes their irony look shrill and forced, especially since they end up babbling like toddlers when they come under fire.

The funny thing is that we're much closer to what they want, except we don't want to go along with their desires. Must be a frustrating paradox.

I was thinking about this from "top down" point of view. Couldn't you lessen the "oh god what the fuck?!" shock-reactions of citizenry through media manipulation? I mean surely government officials have noticed that it's complete and utter pain in the ass to hide things from citizens.

So what if, you subtly make citizens to accept and grow to be okay with whatever fuckery you are up to?

Its been a good thread so far, but i really dont believe in that marxist bullshit you've just spouted.

Culture and race are the most defining aspects to how a group (irl) will behave. The group is the sum of its parts and the parts are affected most by their genetics and their culture, not some mysterious outside forces. Jews are predisposed to paranoia and scizophrenia as a result of their genetics (fact). Their culutre reinforces it, ultimately ending up with them behaving the way they do. Blacks are predisposed to violence. Their culture reinforces it which is why end up with chimpouts when a black is rightfully killed by a police officer.

I dont think "power structures" have anything to do with. I think its possible to subvert the culture of a race and take them in a different direction, but ultimately the direction has to be in line with the races genetic predispositions, exacerbating them. You cant tell me the Australian aboriginals live the way the do because theyre kept down by "the man."

Actually, I think I fucked up my point a little bit their. Its not that a groups culture is subverted, its that the group responds to culture clashes as a result of genetics. The Jewish and European cultures clash because they are fundamentally incompatable which forces members of the group to respond in a certain way to the culture clash.

Of course, in the internet age things are very much different. But for people like the majority of /pol/ users who dont live on the internet, we are still able to respond in the classic way whereas the majority of people are no longer able to respond classically as a result of the internet and the large scale manufactured consensus that goes on here. Its the Kali Yuga, our most base instincts have been irreversibly destroyed

>The chapter begins by revealing a connection between the rampant conspiracy theories found on the internet and an impulse shared by today's society to make sense of the world in the present tense. From this impulse, comes a tendency to seek out patterns, what can result in productive connectivity, or can degrade into indecipherable feedback. Masters of pattern recognition and game theory include John Nash, Norbert Weiner, Friedrich Hayek, and Stewart Brand fit prominently in this chapter that explores the

Of course the output (tv, internet, newspapers, etc) doesn't work as effectively without measuring the inputs (social media, twitter trends, youtube so to find the irony in the trends you will know the meaning.

I invented quantum entangled ironic pairing. A process whereby a subject responds to a specially crafted ironic message and reveals much more about them than they realize via collapsing the superpositions of chained assumptions. When used with appeals to instinct the quantum irony doubles as cognitive load which distracts the conscious and allows more primitive drives to surface subconsciously in response behaviour (to better determine a manipulation strategy).

"Weaponized Irony" sounded sexy but when examined I found it sloppy and amateurish. You couldn't teach those bitches new tricks if they were

There's some truth to it anon.
It's in the fucking Talmud to fuck over anyone non-jewish

What is the evidence that Lockheed Martin did go through with Weaponized Irony, rather than not even receiving the proposal as the article says? How does OP know that @rarebasement and @lesliegrope are part of the Lockheed Martin Project?

this is worth a watch in the context of this thread and what irony can do

You saw that too, huh? Weird since the guy who dropped it did as the stream closed and had nothing to do with what was being discussed.

Good shit. I knew about the a_girl_irl stuff and it matches up with what was released in the past few months. Good luck with the digging on the rest of the Goons.

For what I heard Goonswarm deliberately targeted law enforcement and intelligence people for recruitment into the guild.

Fake Ben has proven he's a pro-censorship hypocrite and a status quo boot licker.

I am no Libertardian but I don't think they lost anything of value.

Try this one on for size: Read every post in this thread as either completely ironic or completely serious.

This is what chaos looks like.

Silly anon, they're both! You can read them either way. Clearly, their relational quality as an indicator of "objective" reality does not actually vary, as language includes inherent assumptions and can never approach full coherence with what actually is referred to. Every post ITT is ironic.

This is not an ironic shitpost.

I have a gut feeling MDE is being used by them and that he'll have a very public downfall as a result of some kind of set-up on this show. Some people should just stay fringe.

Great thread btw. Should be added to the archive thread.

this was really interesting video, I played maybe 3 minutes of it before I got hooked and had to watch the whole thing.

Thank you

ive known about him for a number of years and this thread made me think of him and it surprised me that i have never seen any reference to him or DEFCON or any part of that subculture on /pol/ which on reflection is strange because of the obvious parallels
