So Pinfof uncovered some lovely corruption in the Independent Games Festival. Lets see where this rabbit hole goes!

The IGF: <http://www.igf.com/index.html>

is part of UBM: <http://tech.ubm.com/>

Who claim:

>Our Values and Commitment to the Communities Around Us

>Our continuing evolution is fueled by insight, innovation, collaboration and investment in people, and by our commitment to having a positive social and environmental impact. Our lasting commitment to social and community values are just one of the reasons why our customers and clients continue to rely on our resources and conduct business with us.

This is UBM contact list: <http://createyournextcustomer.com/contact-us/>

There are a few twitter users out there as well:

<https://twitter.com/ubm>
<https://twitter.com/meredithcorley>

Dear UBM, why did you allow the IGF to become so corrupt, as outlined in this article from techraptor?

<http://techraptor.net/content/relationships-indie-gaming-interview-allistair-pins-of-part-2>

Does this look like an OP in the making, or what?

Whoops! And the shills were working so hard. Don't know why GG is the top board now, but after the moviebob drama peeps should know that getting the IGF and associated games more widely discredited is a worthy goal.

UBM Stole GDC from one of the best gaming designers of the 1980's: Chris Crawford.

Since UBM is back in people's minds, remember they are the ones implicated in both the IGF scandal and supporting Leigh Alexander, the megaphone and most vocal ringleader trying to shout down all opposition to her cause. Keep up the pressure.

Chris Crawford is also the one who helped set up DiGRA and was in the original board, back when DiGRA was actually a credible organization figuring out how to improve game design methodologies.

Silverstring did some reviews for them, and in turn, the games they written for appeared on the IGF, which is sponsored by UBM.

>Chris Crawford is also the one who helped set up DiGRA and was in the original board, back when DiGRA was actually a credible organization figuring out how to improve game design methodologies.

Crawford was on the board but I don't think he had much to do with setting it up since it was started in finland. And digra has never been exclusively or even primarily about "figuring out how to improve game design methodologies."

▣ ▶ Leader 02/19/15 (Thu) 16:04:48 ID: 7e20a8 No.381545 >>381741

Um, yeah, I don't know if Crawford is somebody GG should rush to embrace, even if you respect his early work (which you should).

I went to see him talk a few years ago, and he spent the whole time talking about how he doesn't even use the word "game" to describe his work any more, and thinks the industry should drop its focus on "running and shooting" and focus on "storytelling and character development."

If you're strictly in GG for journalistic ethics, maybe that doesn't matter to you, but basically Crawford would prefer an industry that produces AAA Gone Home walking simulators.

Yes. Crawford is pretty much the epitome of a cranky old guy who wishes the industry had gone his way. <https://archive.today/wgYiq>

There's a new ShortFatOtaku video: Good IDGA, Bad IDGA. It talks about the relationship between IGDA and UBM.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=7uGdfQJZoF4>

In summary, IGDA started as a branch of the GDC and was managed by UBM until 2004. As of 2008 they have been managed by the Talley Management Group. ShortFatOtaku puts out a theory is that UBM is still controlling IGDA and is making them attack game developers. The video also repeats some allegations that IGF contests have been rigged.

Bah, we barely have anything. We have the names of a few idiot Gamasutra writers, the IGF, and the CEO of the parent company. There have to be a dozen layers of middle management between them. If there is any conspiracy more vast than stupid people reinforcing each others' stupidity, it's in there.

Simon Carless may be a person of interest.

<http://www.bloomberg.com/research/stocks/private/person.asp?personId=83114353&privcapId=1010784>

> Mr. Carless has been Executive Vice President for Game Development & Black Hat Group at UBM TechWeb Game Network at UBM TechWeb since January 13, 2011.

He was Slashdot editor simoniker. This might explain Slashdot's editorial silence on GG.

John Polson, one of Carless's former subordinates, left UBM Tech to be a talent scout for the Indie Fund. Polson runs Media Indie Exchange, which connects developers with media.

<http://www.linkedin.com/in/johngavinpolson>

I have not looked enough to know if either of them is actually anti-GG or not. Their names have not come up yet.

Looking through the archives, Carless defended TotalBiscuit against an anti-GG attack. That kills some of my theories.

<http://8archive.moe/gamergate/thread/279918/#281636>

You are being retarded. What the hell do you think having ONE stock is going to do for you? You're dealing with people that'll have 3500 stocks or some shit. Think about that. The more stocks someone ELSE has, the more votes they have over you. And their votes are for money.

no shit they own all the shares, do you think the plan is for a hostile takeover?

one share allows you to attend and to speak. your job is to use that platform to convince the other shareholders who own far more than you do, that the current state of IGDA, GDC and qamasutra is a bad one and on the decline.

This is a very easy argument to make.

IGDA: Blockbot scandal, closure of puerto rican branch, damage to reputation, involvement with fake-anonymous harassment group, kate edwards favouriting gun club threats of violence, hiring her own company forever.

GDC: panel after panel on diversity taking up rooms primed for hundreds for attendances of 50, 60, 70, compare to actual conferences about games development that attract hundreds, thousands gamasutra: lost advertisers, lost members, ridiculous articles ON HORSE OR ON FOOT, making it a laughing stock and driving the games industry to distance itself

▶ Leader 03/14/15 (Sat) 17:38:17 ID: c8fd23 No.475642

>>475528

What the hell is speaking supposed to do? Think logically. All these faggots care about is money. So you get to speak. That won't change the votes of bankers that have more shares than you. You can do an emotional plea all you want. But you think you're going to tell Gordon Gekko how to run a company for profit? Good luck on that.

All the scandals won't do much in convincing them who to vote for next on the Board of Directors. You need to put pressure on the people IN that position or you're going to run around in circles.
